FROM THE SECRETARIAT

Dear Friends,

This year, Christians in Australia are being invited to devote a 10-day period to pray intentionally for both reconciliation in this country and for the visible expression of unity amongst Christians. This period of prayer and activity includes National Sorry Day, National Reconciliation Week and the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity. It commenced last Friday, Sorry Day, and concludes next Sunday, Pentecost Sunday.

One opportunity that this period provides for all members of our community is to consider ways in which we can heal the wounds of the past and foster a shared future. It is just at this time, however, that a heated and often divisive debate about crime, law and order, and the economic viability of remote Indigenous communities has been cast in the spotlight.

ENTITLED TO LIVE WITHOUT FEAR OF VIOLENCE

Responding to reports of violence and rape against women and children in Indigenous communities, Federal Indigenous Affairs Minister Mal Brough called a meeting of Federal, State and Territory Government representatives to establish a National Plan of Action Against Indigenous Violence and Child Abuse. Minister Brough stated the objectives of a national response: "I want people to actually have enough confidence to be able to do in perpetrators, and to be able to stand in a court and give evidence, and know they're not going to have crimes committed against them.

"They are the two things, if we don't get to that level, that basic level of confidence in a criminal justice system, and policing, then we're never going to get rid of the criminals out of these communities, and no-one's ever going to feel safe," the Minister said. (refer:

http://www.facsia.gov.au/internet/Minister3.nsf/content/2ue_transcript_18may06.htm)

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Justice Commissioner, Tom Calma, said that, just as in non-Indigenous society, this type of criminal behaviour should not be tolerated in Indigenous society. "All people must respect and honour human rights and abide by the rule of law. Indigenous women and children are entitled to live without fear of violence or abuse and should have the full protection of the law. This type of behaviour has no place in Aboriginal culture and customary law is no excuse to condone such behaviour," he said.

THE PARTICIPATION OF INDIGENOUS LEADERS AND COMMUNITIES ESSENTIAL

Mr Calma called on Government to investigate this issue properly and ensure underlying causes are addressed. "Now that Mr Brough and others have brought these issues to the attention of the world, the questions are: What are they going to do about it? What is the Minister going to do to assist the victims of these crimes? ... How is he proposing to involve Indigenous people in the solutions and what mechanisms will be put in place to ensure that these long-known and widely-reported atrocities are sustainably addressed?"

Mr Calma said that governments need to work with communities and families to identify solutions to the socio-economic factors that impact on violence in communities, such as improved housing and living conditions, creating meaningful employment, recreation facilities and general community health education programs. (http://www.hreoc.gov.au/media_releases/2006/28_06.htm)

Prominent Elder Lowitja O'Donoghue spoke of the struggles of remote Indigenous communities over recent decades and questioned whether there is the political and community will to thoroughly address the issues.

"Aboriginal people tell me their spirits are broken. That's the term they use. Their spirits are broken. They don't know where to turn. They don't know who to talk to. They don't understand the programs. They don't understand this mainstream, whole-of-government approach that is the new way of doing things," she said.

Dr O'Donoghue has emphasised the importance of Aboriginal leaders being involved in any initiatives to address the issues at the national and community level.

"I get very emotional when I talk about this because I'm one of these people who has worked all my life for my people. I find people don't value my experience, don't value what I can contribute, and I think 'How much more can I do?'"

Gary Highland, national director of Australians for Native Title and Reconciliation (ANTaR) has emphasised that a major national effort needs to involve governments and Indigenous communities as equal partners to overcome the crisis of violence that has overtaken many Aboriginal communities.

"The Minister's call is similar to what many Indigenous leaders have been saying for some time – that Indigenous and non-Indigenous communities have to face up to the reality of this situation and take urgent action to overcome it."

Mr Highland said that Indigenous leaders from across the political spectrum, including Mick Dodson, Larissa Behrendt, Warren Mundine, Sue Gordon, John Ah Kit, Tom Calma, Boni Robertson and Rob Welsh, have frequently spoken out on this issue in the past, but their calls have been largely ignored by successive governments.

"What is needed is a comprehensive national response that involves Indigenous communities in the solutions." He warned against an approach where solutions are imposed over the top by government. (refer:

AUSTRALIA HAS "NO RIGHT TO BE SURPRISED"

Bishop Christopher Saunders, Bishop of Broome and chairman of the Australian Catholic Social Justice Council said that the issue is not a new one and society has "no right to be surprised".

"Unemployment, third world health standards, a chronic public housing crisis and substance abuse combine to defeat the well-being of families and the promise of peace."

"One common denominator among all Aboriginal communities is their poverty and social injustice. You've marginalised people, you leave them on the outer, you don't nurture them and you don't nourish them; it is no wonder these things are happening."

"The poverty and feeling of powerlessness has become a real force and it's in that sort of environment that you get abuse.

"When you're at the bottom of the socio economic ladder and economic systems are trying to keep you there, or just not offering any sense of hope, you really have to be a strong person with a lot of determination to be above that," he said.

The Bishop called on Government to boost the economic structure in remote areas to address poverty and improve family support and community development.

THE NEED FOR A PROPER RESPONSE

Fr Brian McCoy SJ has worked with Aboriginal communities, including Wadeye, for over 30 years. He says the focus must move beyond sensationalist reporting that portrays all Aboriginal society as "violent and dysfunctional".

"A few days ago, a group of senior Aboriginal men who over many years have committed themselves to these issues sent out a press release. They condemned the violence absolutely... they called on governments to support men to do this. The voices of these men, my professional colleagues and friends, have largely not been heard in the recent media coverage. It is easier to depict violence and to stop at the sensational moment. It is much harder to converse seriously with those who are trying to deal with violence and to stop it."

Fr McCoy highlights the lived experience of men in these communities. "When housing is overcrowded, unemployment is high, resources are scarce and there are few healthy older people to guide them, what kind of adults can they become?

"Should we put the full weight of intervention on law and order, or does putting men into prison make them more, or less, violent?"

Focusing on prevention he asked, "Where, in the 2006 Budget for Indigenous Affairs do we find support for Aboriginal men's groups and programs? What encouragement is given to young fathers and babies, to complement that given to young mothers and babies? Where do we find the conversation, partnership and support for those men who are making a difference?"

"Whether the issue be petrol sniffing, violence, alcohol or sexual abuse, the media now tend to sensationalise and marginalize all Aboriginal men, and to present all Aboriginal society as violent and dysfunctional... We find it easier to talk about Aboriginal people than to talk with them; we prefer negative stereotypes to the challenge of forming partnerships," he said.

(<http://www.eurekastreet.com.au/article.aspx?aeid=864>)

Speaking in the lead up to Sorry Day and National Reconciliation Week, Patrick Dodson called for an adequate response to the consequences of drug and alcohol abuse that many Aboriginal individuals and communities have endured for a long time.

"Before jumping to solutions, we need to ask the question: Why? Police presence and incarceration may provide a short-term fix, but it won't answer the question: Why is this happening? ... Without serious consideration, populist responses will only increase arrests and incarceration rates, neither of which has delivered rehabilitation or improvement to the fundamental ontological dilemmas.

"We do come from different cultures and have different laws. But, ultimately, we possess a common humanity. It is our respective uniqueness that offers us the opportunity for reconciliation if we have the courage to engage in dialogue. We must delve further to discover why we have not achieved better outcomes to such challenges, and in doing so come to a deeper understanding of why reconciliation is necessary and beneficial," he said.

THE CALL FOR RECONCILIATION

This deeper question relating to reconciliation between Indigenous and non-Indigenous Australians was raised by the Holy Father when he welcomed Australia's new Ambassador to the Holy See on 18 May. After commending Australia's efforts for international peace through the commitment of peace-keeping forces and aid initiatives, he spoke of the need for justice and peace at home. Reconciliation with Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders was his focus.

"In regard to the Aboriginal people of your land, there is still much to be achieved. Their social situation is cause for much pain. I encourage you and the Government to continue to address with compassion and determination the deep underlying causes of their plight. Commitment to truth opens the way to lasting reconciliation through the healing process of asking for forgiveness and granting forgiveness – two indispensable elements for peace. In this way our memory is purified, our hearts are made serene, and our future is filled with a well-founded hope in the peace which springs from truth."

(http://www.va/holy_father/benedict_xvi/speeches/2006/may/documents/hf_ben-xvi_spe_20060518_ambassador-australia_en.html)

Archbishop Barry Hickey, chairman of the Catholic Bishops Commission for Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders, spoke to ABC's "Lateline" about the Pope's call on the Australian Government. "He's just talking about the principles of reconciliation, that one looks at a situation and says 'Mistakes have been made. We are sorry that they have happened and we ask your forgiveness' and the other party forgives. That's the beginning of reconciliation, so it's more on the basic process of resolving problems that the Pope is talking about, not on any political situation that might exist in Australia."

Commenting on the level of determination to address the causes of disadvantage to which the Holy Father referred, Archbishop Hickey said, "But I don't think there's much determination. Plenty of words, millions of dollars of money, and yet, we hear that there's not enough money, as if money is going to solve it. I think determination needs to be increased now to do something about the social situation, the family break-up, the violence, the addictions... Not all Aboriginal people are like that of course we know but there are too many communities where they have no hope."

He called for the personal commitment of Australians to foster a shared future of hope. "We can't leave everything to the Government. The Government can deal with structures, can provide money, can provide programs, but the heart, the compassion, the forgiveness, the reconciliation has to be done by ordinary people getting together, speaking to each other, making friends, and together moving ahead. Without that personal element, I don't think anything can succeed," said Archbishop Hickey. (<http://www.abc.net.au/lateline/content/2006/s1645758.htm>)

As we engage in this 10-day period of prayer for reconciliation in this country and for the visible expression of unity amongst Christians, it becomes clear that all of us have a role to play in addressing with compassion and determination the deep underlying causes of the challenges facing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

NATIONAL ABORIGINAL AND TORRES STRAIT ISLANDER ECUMENICAL COMMISSION – "MAKE INDIGENOUS POVERTY HISTORY".

The Make Indigenous Poverty History campaign aims to ensure that the global campaign supporting the Millennium Development Goals does not overlook the poverty suffered by Indigenous Peoples around the world including Australia. The goals do not specifically target Indigenous Peoples but Indigenous Peoples are often the ones most affected by extreme poverty and usually rank at the bottom of most social and economic indicators. The campaign invites us to compare the living standards and levels of health and wellbeing of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples with those of the rest of Australia – not to the poorest of the world's poor. CARITAS APPEALS – INDONESIA AND TIMOR LESTE

Caritas Australia is responding to the need of people in Central Java who have already been impacted by the impending eruption of the Mt Merapi volcano. Locals fear that this earthquake will be a trigger for the eruption. Caritas agencies already have pre-positioned resources in Central Java in the event of displacement of the people living in the surrounding regions of the erupting volcano. The initial response to the earthquake has involved the use of the local Catholic network, including the use of Church buildings as temporary refuges for the many displaced survivors and providing the people with food, non-food items and first aid assistance. (refer:

<http://www.caritas.org.au/emergencies/indonesiaEarthquake.htm>)

In East Timor, the recent period of unrest started at the end of April, over 12,000 people have fled their homes. Many have taken refuge in Churches, convents and other Catholic institutions. Caritas Australia is providing displaced families with clothing, bedding, hygiene kits and specific children's materials. In particular assistance is being concentrated on the area around Taci Tolu, where historically Caritas had intervened with a shelter program. The plan is to provide semi-permanent housing for around 50 families whose houses have been burned down during the recent unrest. (refer:

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL REPORT 2006 – THE STATE OF THE WORLD'S HUMAN RIGHTS.

Speaking at the launch of Amnesty International Report 2006, Secretary General Irene Khan said that the security agenda of the powerful and privileged had hijacked the energy and attention of the world from serious human rights crises elsewhere. "Governments collectively and individually paralysed international institutions and squandered public resources in pursuit of narrow security interests, sacrificed principles in the name of the "war on terror" and turned a blind eye to massive human rights violations" said Ms Khan. JUNE SOCIAL JUSTICE CALENDAR

JUNE 3 THE MABO CASE

In 1992, the High Court ruled that native title to land is recognised by the common law of Australia and that under Australian law, Indigenous people have rights to land which existed before colonisation and still exist. This decision did away with the legal fiction that when Australia was "discovered" by Captain Cook in 1788 it was terra nullius, an empty or uncivilised land. The case centred on the Murray Islands in the eastern part of the Torres Strait Islands, with the Meriam people led by Eddie Koiki Mabo.

"Aborigines were dispossessed of their land parcel by parcel, to make way for expanding colonial settlement. Their dispossession underwrote the development of the nation." Chief Justice Gerard Brennan

NATIVE TITLE

Following the High Court's Mabo decision which recognised the existence of native title rights, Land Councils and other Aboriginal organisations throughout Australia lobbied the Federal Government to legislate to protect any native title that had survived 200 years of colonisation. In December 1993, the Native Title Act passed through the Federal Parliament, establishing in law what the Mabo decision had said, and making native title claims possible.

THE WIK CASE

The Mabo decision, and the subsequent Native Title Act, left unresolved the issue of native title on pastoral leases. The Wik case concerned land which is, or has been, subject to pastoral leases. Pastoral leases conferred exclusive rights of use of the land to graze animals, but not exclusive rights of ownership to the land. The Wik people of Cape York in Queensland claimed native title could coexist with current pastoral leases. In December 1996, the High Court held that native title rights could exist side-by-side with the rights of pastoralists on cattle and sheep stations, called coexistence.

THE NATIVE TITLE AMENDMENT BILL

The Wik decision led to a reaction from pastoralists and conservative leaders, who demanded that native title be extinguished on pastoral leases. The Ten Point Plan was used as the basis for drafting the Native Title Amendment Bill. The plan not only effectively extinguished native title on pastoral leases, but also on a range of other land tenures, vacant Crown land (land owned by the government that no-one else is using or has an interest in) in towns and cities and over waterways and airspace.

JUNE 4 PENTECOST SUNDAY

This Fire Blessing has been used as a prayer by the Aboriginal people in the Kimberley for thousands of years.

*May the fire be in your thoughts, making them good and just,
May it protect you from all harm.
May the fire be in your eyes,
May it open your eyes to see what is good in life,
May it protect you from speaking against another.
May the fire be in your ears,
We pray that you may hear with deep listening
So that you may hear the flow of water and of all Creation and of the Dreaming.
May you be protected from gossip
And from those things that harm and break down your family.
May the fire be in your arms and hands,
So that you may be of service and build up love.
May the fire protect you from all violence.
May the fire be in your whole being, in your legs and feet,
Enabling you to walk the earth with respect and care,
So that you may journey in ways of goodness and trust
And be protected from walking away from what is true.*
